Among several factors which has led to the emergence of the Mexican restaurant, none is the biggest contributing factor to the significant changes in Mexican food as well as the numerous restaurant options that exist. You no longer need to rely on the standard Mexican street vendors, who serve the best Mexican food but only in limited form. It's much easier to find any Mexican food of choice in any number of restaurants. Today it is an easy and very common practice that Mexican food has become like fast food. Having appeared in the United States of America, the Mexican restaurants are open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week and it is not unusual to see them open even on weekends. They are usually under one roof with limited seating, minimizing the delivery of greasy and tasty food to the customers. A typical Mexican restaurant is typically compact in size with a bar seating. A unique feature of these places usually include the advertisement of a famous band, songs in the background and the employees dance on the tables. You can count on the food to be quite tasty, there are no complaints about that at all. Mexican food was not so popular in the United States of America until more than 100 years ago. It came from the United States via Mexico and Peru. When it first appeared in the United States of America, it was treated as an exotic and imported food and with the arrival of the drug cartels from the 1980s, it gained much popularity. The most common Mexican food that you will find in Mexican restaurants can be described as a main dish cooked in an oven. On the other hand, it doesn't mean that there are no Mexican foods that do not require the use of an oven. You will, however, find them in Mexican restaurants. Common Mexican food in Mexican restaurants is actually more like an appetizer and the main course will be something like a taco or burrito. Some restaurants offer a pretty wide variety of Mexican foods on the menu. You will be able to find a typical taco menu, which will contain an assortment of different taco items. The Mexican restaurant also known as the barbacoa restaurant is usually found under one roof
